Dengue fever also known as break bone fever, is an infectious tropical disease caused by the dengue virus. Dengue is spread through the bite of the female mosquito. It prefers to breed in clean, stagnant water easily found in our homes. The mosquito becomes infected when it takes the blood of a person infected with the virus. After about one week, the mosquito can then transmit the virus by biting a healthy person. Symptoms include fever, headache, muscle and joint pains, and a characteristic skin rash that is similar to measles. A person can prevent himself from dengue by using mosquito repellents, even indoors wearing full clothes and not letting water stay in open containers like tires, flower pots, flower buds, water tanks etc. The Government of Punjab has taken significant measures in this regard. Teams have been organized for the purpose of cleaning, spraying and fogging. Countless seminars have been held in schools and colleges and there has been a major drive to educate the public on how to prevent dengue fever.
