"We call such people travellers because they do not stay at home. But they are genuine travellers. For they travel, not for travelling's sake, but for conventions. They hanker after mythology, and the facts, however curious, beautiful and varied, are a disillusionment. It is only the society of their fellow – tourists, with whom they conspire, every now and then to make a little oasis of home in the foreign wilderness, coupled with the consciousness of a social duty done, that keeps them even moderately cheerful in the face of the depressing facts of travel.

Questions: -

- (i) Describe the theme of the passage.
- (ii) Why do people go for travelling when they are not the genuine travellers?
